have taken their rightful place to empower individuals and communities to change their life ecosystems and preserve and improve their health. It is imperative to shift from targeting protective or risk factors which have linear causal relationships with health conditions and or comorbidities and encompass a systemic understanding of the role of health determinants in creating health. Individual, collective and structural ecological approaches can better reduce health inequities. Moreover, engaging the presumed beneficiaries from such strategies ensures that actual needs are identified and choices are context specific. It improves the whole implementation process as well as its results. Higher levels of participation such as co-creation imply a bottom-up voluntary collaborative process rooted in values of diversity, mutual trust, openness, autonomy, freedom and respect as well as shared expertise, responsibility and decision making which are essential values in co-creating health promotion.

Public Health Promotion and Medical Education Reform, volume III Jian Chen, Xiaoyun Zeng, Zhiyong Zhang, Yasusei Kudo, Trine Fink, 2025-11-18. This Research Topic is part of the series of Public Health Promotion and Medical Education Reform. Public Health Promotion and Medical Education Reform Volume I, Public Health Promotion and Medical Education Reform Volume II. All over the world, more than 80% of medical service and public health education are conducted by graduates from local regional medical schools. Therefore, these schools are facing the pressing demand for better health services principally due to population growth and greater public health awareness. However, the traditional medical education is failing to cope with these challenges largely because of didactic teaching methods, fragmented curricula and passive learning which cannot train our students to become self-directed lifelong learners and qualified healthcare workers. We are also very aware that simply expanding the class size of medical schools and opening new medical schools cannot meet this demand. The medical school educators thus implement a series of reform across every aspect of the medical education, e.g. teaching content, style and methodology which has been gradually deepened in many majors such as medicine, nursing, pharmacy and public health. Otherwise, the outbreak of 2019 novel coronavirus emphasizes the vital interplay of public health and medical education disciplines promoting the integration of public health content into medical education. That is, the better healthcare workers for the future should be responsible for not only disease diagnosis and treatment but also health promotion and disease prevention. The COVID-19 pandemic reveals the urgent need for healthcare services worldwide that is outstripping the pace of healthcare workforce growth, underlining the necessity of a paradigm shift in medical education. Therefore, the aim of the Research Topic is to provide a comprehensive overview of current reform attempts in education for healthcare workers, mainly but not exclusively focusing on the high quality research studies carried out in local regional medical schools. In addition, it is being widely accepted that disease prevention and health promotion may be more effective in improving the health status of a population. We thus greatly encourage contributions providing innovative methods and assessment of incorporation of core public health into the medical curricula. Both ongoing and completed original research work is welcome. Consequently, areas to be covered in this Research Topic may include but are not limited to Situation and trends of public health research practice and policy Development and evaluation of public health education National and international medical education reform to produce well trained students and workers undergraduates and postgraduates local regional medical schools Implementation and evaluation of integrating public health content in the medical curricula
