Rural-urban Migration in Developing Countries Somik V. Lall, Harris Selod, 2006 The migration of labor from rural to urban areas is an important part of the urbanization process in developing countries Even though it has been the focus of abundant research over the past five decades some key policy questions have not found clear answers yet To what extent is internal migration a desirable phenomenon and under what circumstances Should governments intervene and if so with what types of interventions What should be their policy objectives To shed light on these important issues the authors survey the existing theoretical models and their conflicting policy implications and discuss the policies that may be justified based on recent relevant empirical studies A key limitation is that much of the empirical literature does not provide structural tests of the theoretical models but only provides partial findings that can support or invalidate intuitions and in that sense support or invalidate the policy implications of the models The authors broad assessment of the literature is that migration can be beneficial or at least be turned into a beneficial phenomenon so that in general migration restrictions are not desirable They also identify some data issues and research topics which merit further investigation World Bank web site

Natural Disasters, Foreign Trade and Agriculture in Mexico Sergio O. Saldaña Zorrilla, PhD, 2015-07-04 This work responds to the increasing global need of measuring and analyzing impacts vulnerabilities and coping capacity of countries regions and communities regarding climate change extreme weather conditions natural disasters and institutional constraints The case of Mexico analyzed in this work provides lessons for further developing countries to assess natural disasters vulnerability for making informed adaptation decisions and to optimize resources for reducing country and community vulnerability This book s analyses contribute to the current debate of the long term economic impact of natural disasters hurricanes earthquakes etc as well as offer an integral methodology combining natural and social sciences for studies of country and community level vulnerability to climate change The lessons derived from this analysis provide useful elements for the design and improvement of governmental policies concerning social and economic development as well In addition the desegregation of this analysis has the advantage
