DESCRIPTION AND OPERATION

Each loader consists of a loader frame, lift arm, lift cylinders, bucket cylinders, control valve, hydraulic pump, and necessary hoses and tubes. The components of a tractor loader are illustrated in Figure 1.

SERIES 727 LOADER

The Series 727 Loader is used with the Ford 4000 and Ford 5000 All Purpose Tractors. The loader uses the tractor hydraulic lift system. Loader control is accomplished by a double speed (flange), tractor accessory, remote control valve. The two lift cylinders are single-acting displacement type and the one bucket cylinder is a double-acting type.

The tubing and hoses connecting the control valve to the cylinders are secured to the main frame. The loader frame is welded box-type construction and mounts at the tractor front support and at each rear axle housing. Separate attaching kits are used for the Ford 4000 and Ford 5000 Tractor installations.

SERIES 730 AND 735 LOADERS

The Series 730 and 735 Loaders are available as a non-self-leveling loader equipped with a unit-type control valve, or a self-leveling loader equipped with a stacked-type compensating control valve. These loaders are for industrial-type applications. Optional capacity front-mounted, crankshaft-driven hydraulic pumps power the loader. Loader control is accomplished by a control valve mounted on the right-hand part of the loader frame. The tubing and hoses connecting the control valve to the cylinders are secured to the mainframe.

On the self-leveling loaders, the loader control valve provides a bucket self-leveling feature utilizing pump hydraulic oil as its working force. As the loader lift arms are raised, the compensating section of the loader control valve adjusts the bucket to maintain approximately the original degree of bucket rollback.

In both types, the loader frame is welded box-type construction. Serviceable bushings (Series 735 only) are used in the loader lift arms and in the cylinders. A hydraulic filter, which has a safety bypass, is
