Emergency Handbook John Lippmann, Stan Bugg, 2021 There is a broad range of injuries and illnesses that a diver may suffer from Some of these are directly related to diving itself while other may be incidental However in any case prompt first aid and diving medical advice is often required to minimise the impact It is important that divers improve their knowledge and understanding of the recognition and first aid management of diving related injuries and the Diving Emergency Handbook was first created 27 years ago to assist with this It has been updated periodically to deal with changes in knowledge and practices and is the most widely distributed diving first aid manual in the Asia Pacific region There have also been editions published in the USA UK Germany Holland Japan Italy South Africa China and Korea Many of the editions were published as The DAN Emergency Handbook The authors have just updated and prepared an 8th edition which the Australasian Diving Safety Foundation ADSF has published and is distributing free of charge consistent with its mission to improve diving safety and reduce the incidence of diving related illness injuries and deaths ADSF website Scuba Times ,
