Disability And Managed Care Disability And Managed Care:

Disability and Managed Care Arnold Birenbaum, 1999-10-30 Since the passage in 1990 of the Americans with Disabilities Act society has made considerable strides in improving the quality of life and the productivity of individuals with disabilities At the same time however the American health care system has undergone considerable change with some unforeseen consequences for those with disabilities Birenbaum analyzes all of the disability and health policy issues that have emerged from our reliance upon managed care First he examines how disability has been defined and redefined in social science and in government regulations Then he discusses the major changes in health care over the last decade in particular the financial and organizational principles behind managed care After reviewing the structural advantages and disadvantages of managed care for people with disabilities he concludes with observations on the future of health care for people with disabilities particularly in the context of the quality of life and the possible functional outcomes following medical interventions

Medicaid Managed Care DIANE Publishing Company, 1996 Examines the extent to which states are implementing Medicaid prepaid managed care programs for disabled beneficiaries the prepaid care plans which are concerned about the amount of financial risk involved in treating people with extensive medical needs the states Federal government which run Medicaid which totaled 159 billion in FY 1995 Managed Care & Developmental Disabilities Dale Mitchell, 1999 The objectives of managed care cost containment efficiency and uniformity seem to be at odds with the individualized habilitation goals of persons with disabilities Person centered planning and self determination require individuality and flexibility not traditional strengths of managed care plans But like it or not managed care is here to stay How the field of disabilities meets the challenge of managed health care in the beginning of the next century will determine to a large extent how well it meets the unique and complex needs of persons with disabilities Dale Mitchell traces the advent of managed care in the U S from both the acute and long term perspective analyzes the forces at work in the government and health care industry points to the likely future outcomes and suggests ways to prepare for and make the most of the far reaching and significant changes to come for the field of developmental disabilities Managed Care Developmental Disabilities is a must read for anyone concerned with the future of health care for persons with disabilities as well as the quality and cost of that care Back cover

People with Disabilities and Medicaid Managed Care John Connolly,2012 Individuals with disabilities are by definition a Medicaid population with special needs Precisely because of their high needs and costs Medicaid beneficiaries with disabilities are increasingly a focus of state efforts to improve care and manage Medicaid spending more effectively In most states now some children and or adults with disabilities are subject to mandatory enrollment in managed care arrangements for at least some of their care and more states are moving in this direction Further beginning in 2014 the Affordable Care Act will expand Medicaid to reach millions of low income uninsured Americans including many with disabilities and states are widely expected to rely on managed care organizations to serve the newly eligible mostly adult population While managed care offers tools to improve care coordination and quality identification of the conditions and structures essential to promote these aims and of the problems that may result if they are absent can help guide the design of sound managed care programs for all Medicaid beneficiaries and particularly for beneficiaries with disabilities for whom both the potential risks and gains may be greatest To that end this brief examines central issues in Medicaid managed acute care through the lens of disability

Medicaid Managed Care for People with Disabilities ,2013 Medicaid Managed Care United States. Congress. Senate. Special Committee on Aging,1997 Forum Session Announcement - Managed Care for Medicaid

Beneficiaries with Disabilities , Overview With the ever growing concern about costs in Medicaid and across the health care sector many state officials and others aim to find savings and deliver more efficient and effective care What has been the experience among the states with serving this group of vulnerable people through managed care In what ways are different states approaching this issue This Forum session will review these questions and address the challenges facing the nation and states in providing efficient and accessible medical care to persons with disabilities through Medicaid managed care arrangements For example the estimated average spending on a person eligible for Medicaid on the basis of disability status was about 16 600 in fiscal year FY 2009 compared with average spending of 2 900 on non disabled children and 4 100 on adults without disabilities under 65 years of age 1 Expenditures for persons with disabilities under age 65 are the fastest growing segment of Medicaid costs 2 The increasing number of people with chronic conditions and the amount of care needed grows each year for example people with five or more chronic conditions see about 14 physicians per year 3 Even if persons with disabilities have a stable chronic condition they may be more at risk of infection falls and other complications and difficulties Speakers will review the background and history of coverage through managed care studies that have evaluated states experiences with managed care for persons with disabilities the different types of managed care used by states and the problems encountered in delivering care in this way Coordination of Care for Persons with Disabilities Enrolled in Medicaid Managed Care Shoshanna Sofaer,Barbara Kreling,Martha Carmel,2000 The purpose of this document is to present a conceptual framework to guide the development of measures of care coordination that would be both feasible to apply and meaningful in assessing the performance of Medicaid managed care organizations MCOs that enroll people with disabilities

Medicaid Managed Care and Disability Discrimination Issues Mary Crossley,2013 This article examines issues potentially raised under the Americans with Disabilities Act ADA by states decisions whether and how to include disabled Medicaid recipients in the massive shift towards Medicaid managed care Part II briefly examines the special issues that disabled Medicaid recipients pose with respect to managed care enrollment These include issues of cost quality access and program design and implementation Part III describes various approaches that state programs have taken or are proposing to take with respect to the enrollment of disabled Medicaid recipients in managed care These approaches range from simply excluding the SSI population from managed care enrollment to developing specialized managed care plans for Medicaid recipients with special needs to enrolling disabled recipients in mainstream Medicaid managed care plans Finally Part IV discusses the ADA issues that each of these approaches may raise and explores how those issues might be resolved Part V concludes with suggestions regarding how state Medicaid officials can avoid ADA liability in developing Medicaid managed care programs Ultimately because Medicaid is not a single federal program but rather a multiplicity of state programs in which variations only increase as states modify their traditional fee for service Medicaid programs toward managed care the ADA s implications for Medicaid managed care must be addressed on a state by state and fact specific basis Nonetheless considering how the ADA s nondiscrimination mandate might be raised in the movement to Medicaid managed care will help state planners not only avoid potential liability for an ADA violation but also think in broad terms about how to design and implement Medicaid managed care programs in a fashion responsive to the various needs of the diverse Medicaid population
