Fibre Metal Laminates Fibre Metal Laminates:

Fibre Metal Laminates Ad Vlot, Jan Willem Gunnink, 2011-06-28 Fibre metal laminates were developed at Delft University of Technology in The Netherlands from the beginning of the 1980s This is a new family of hybrid materials consisting of thin metal layers bonded together by fibres embedded in an adhesive As a result of this build up fibre metal laminates possess a mixture of the characteristics of both metals and composite materials Initial development led to the Arall variant using aramid fibres which was first applied on the C 17 military transport aircraft around 1990 Large scale application became possible with a variant using glass fibres dubbed Glare which was selected for the Airbus A380 super jumbo in 2001 This is the first book to discuss these new materials and it deals mostly with Glare It covers most of the relevant aspects of the materials from static mechanical properties fatigue and impact to design production and maintenance of aircraft structures This book contains the basic information on these new materials necessary for engineers and aircraft operators alike

Fatigue and Fracture of Fibre Metal Laminates René Alderliesten, 2017-04-19 This book contributes to the field of hybrid technology describing the current state of knowledge concerning the hybrid material concept of laminated metallic and composite sheets for primary aeronautical structural applications It is the only book to date on fatigue and fracture of fibre metal laminates FMLs The first section of the book provides a general background of the FML technology highlighting the major FML types developed and studied over the past decades in conjunction with an overview of industrial developments based on filed patents In turn the second section discusses the mechanical response to quasi static loading together with the fracture phenomena during quasi static and cyclic loading To consider the durability aspects related to strength justification and certification of primary aircraft structures the third section discusses thermal aspects related to FMLs and their mechanical response to various environmental and acoustic conditions Fibre Metal Laminates Ad Vlot, Jan Willem

Gunnink, 2011-04-27 Manufacturing Fibre-metal Laminates R. V. Praag, 1994 Stretch Forming of Thermoplastic Fibre-metal Laminates Anthony Sexton, 2015 Fibre metal laminates are sandwich materials comprised of alternating layers of fibre reinforced composites and metal alloys These materials can offer superior properties compared to the monolithic constituents such as superior specific strength compared to metals and better impact and fatigue resistance than composite materials The use of fibre metal laminates is currently restricted to specialised applications where the superior properties justify the high cost This is due to the increased manufacturing time and cost over conventional materials A method for mass production of fibre metal laminates would allow them to be integrated more easily into existing production facilities and greatly reduce the cost associated with their use This thesis investigates the stamp formability of fibre metal laminates using two distinct materials one laminate based on a self reinforced polypropylene composite and the other based on a glass fibre reinforced polypropylene composite Specimens of varying geometry were stretched over a hemispherical punch to elicit different deformation modes in the fibre metal laminates and a non contact optical measurement system was used to measure the surface strain during deformation These experiments analysed the effect of the deformation mode on the formability of the laminates The results from the experimentation were used to assess the deformation behaviour of the fibre metal laminates and to identify the safe forming limits of the materials It was found that the fibre metal laminates can be formed in a similar manner to monolithic metals The self reinforced polypropylene laminate was found to exhibit superior formability to monolithic aluminium whereas the glass fibre reinforced polypropylene laminate showed reduced formability In addition the effect of temperature on the formability of the laminates was investigated The temperature did not have a significant effect on the deformation behaviour during the forming process in either fibre metal laminate and no increased formability was exhibited by the glass fibre reinforced polypropylene based laminate However the self reinforced polypropylene based laminate showed improved formability at elevated temperatures Two significant findings were identified the friction interaction between the specimens and the tooling has a major effect on the forming of the laminates and the forming limits of the aluminium are improved when bonded to self reinforced polypropylene composite The finite element analysis software ABAQUS Standard was chosen for simulation of fibre metal laminate forming Tensile tests were performed to obtain the mechanical behaviour of the constituent materials where the composites were simulated using non linear elastic orthotropic material models and the aluminium using an elastic plastic model The experimental forming results were compared to the simulation and it was found that the simulation could accurately represent the general forming behaviour of the laminates There was difficulty in matching some of the glass fibre reinforced polypropylene laminates due the non homogeneous behaviour of the composite Results from the simulated specimens were used to assess the deformation of the composite which could not be directly observed in the experiments and to determination a preliminary failure condition of the composite experiencing stretch forming using the predicted strain in the failure region Laser Forming of Fibre Metal Laminates Christian Carey,2009 Manufacturing of Components of Fibre-metal Laminates J.
