Reconciling Human Needs and Conserving Biodiversity: Large Landscapes as a New Conservation Paradigm Bila-Isia Inogwabini, 2020-02-18 Protected areas have often been defined as the backbones of biodiversity conservation Protected areas have often been defined as the backbones of biodiversity conservation However legitimate demands formulated by countries for their economic development growing human populations forest fragmentations and needs of local communities for sustainable livelihoods are also pressing demands on protected areas stringently pressuring conservation community to identify means to reconcile long term biodiversity conservation and communities livelihoods Hence integrating conservation activities within the global framework of economic development of countries with high biodiversity had become part of conservation paradigms Integrated development as a route to conservation strict protected areas community

managed areas etc have been tried but resulted in debatable outcomes in many ways The lukewarm nature of these results brought landscape approach at the front of biodiversity conservation in Central Africa Since the late 1990s the landscape approach uses large areas with different functional attributes and shifts foundational biodiversity conservation paradigms Changes are brought to the role traditionally attributed to local communities aligning sustainable development with conservation and stretching conservation beyond the confines of traditional protected areas These three shifts need a holistic approach to respond to different conservation questions There are only a few instances where the landscape experience has been scientifically documented and lessons learnt drawn into a corpus of knowledge to guide future conservation initiatives across Central Africa To subjugate one biodiversity conservation landscape as one case study emerged as a matter of urgency to present the potential knowledge acquired throughout the landscape experiment including leadership and management processes tried results at least partially achieved and why such and such other process or management arrangement were been chosen among many other alternatives etc The challenges of the implementation of the conservation landscape approach needed also to be documented This book responds to the majority of these questions drawing its content from the firsthand field knowledge it discusses these shifts and documents what has been tried how successful unsuccessful it was and what lessons learnt from these trials Theoretical questions such as threat index and ecological services etc are also discussed and gaps in knowledge are identified African Wildlife ,1971
