Dynamic and effective.

Finally, the authors of this volume do not deny (p. 196) that Europe's initial efforts concerning women's environmental problems (Sweden, 1970s) involved all major legal systems even though women's movements were not yet strong. It is possible instead, perhaps in fact, for the initial 1970s-era women's movements and Europe's early 1970s 15-year period(s) to have facilitated the eventual institutionalization of women's groups related to the issues environmentalists addressed. The authors do not deny that 1970s-era women's movements, especially in Scandinavia, contributed to the institutionalization of environmental issues in the 1970s and 1980s. However, they do not think that the institutionalization of environmental issues was due to the 1970s-era women's movements. The authors' conclusion is that the institutionalization of environmental issues was due to the 1970s-era women's movements.
