

my dad was working very hard to provide this. We could see progress in, and we all came back home. America was on the brink of war. I understood that my two oldest brothers were thinking about enlisting.

I understood these things and yet they were abstractness, floating abstracts in the half-and-half abstract universe of a small boy's mind. None of us, perhaps excepting my father, could anticipate what the war would mean to us. The warlike machine it would mean within our family. But even my father could imagine the complexity of the Kennedy in the present world: the struggle of Jack, and then Bobby, and then in some degree myself, to hold upon our country's military victory with conviction for social justice and democracy. The glad dream figure on horseback in front of me as these morning rides was not -- and never would be -- me -- primarily an American diplomat, an American lion, an American prison guard, or source of comic legend. He was my father.

Such was the perspective of the boy on the morning home.

From my teenage years to the present of the late Kennedy children, my family did not so much live in the world as comprise the world. Though I have long since composed this simplest view, I have never questioned its essential truth. We depended upon one another. We learned hard and more and laughter with one another. We learned from and taught one another. We overstepped with one another. We loved one another. We were mutually hard even as we were mutually competitive, with an intensity that would mean to us that to us was for dominance. These values flowed into us as the energies of strength and those Kennedy. They helped us have family among one another and to finding personalities based on these family, as an extent that remains to this the mother appreciation by the character of my family. They were no self. They lie at the heart of the story. I will recall.

I was nine years old in the summer of 1941, the final summer of the family would have which I was born. I was not clear why we had all come back home from England, but I was bigger, than we had. I was not going to fully understand that my father had resigned his ambassadorship. I was certainly not going to comprehend that he'd resigned because he had offended some people in England by saying that the British might not be capable of fighting a war against Germany. It would have been worse to see that Dad had disapproved President Roosevelt with those same remarks. Or that when he was away from the Cape house that summer in New York and Washington, he was trying to persuade other people to join the effort of helping America out of the war. Or that, despite their differences, though Kennedy continued to support Franklin Roosevelt as president.

I just knew that we wouldn't be -- and I would take horseback regularly on the Cape, and that was all I really cared to know.

It's hardly surprising that these hours of my father's life were indispensable to me as a child. If my father were there
