

2- The Power Supply Issue

The Problem:

The power supply of the DMS500 consists of an external unit with detachable power cord. This power supply has to deliver around 12V to your dreambox to ensure stable operation. It does this job by transforming the 230V~ (or 110V~ accross th ocean) from your wall socket, to a stable 12V- by using a method know as: 'Switching Power Supply'. Instead of a normal (bulky and heavy) transformer, this unit switches the current VERY fast trough a couple of transistors. Because it switches constantly, the current is turned on and off at a fast rate, wich will introduce a lot of noise at the output. To stabilize this, a capacitor is placed at the end to serve as a buffer. This capacitor is charged when the transistor is ON, and will be discharged by your dreambox when the transistor is OFF. People have reported problems with this capacitor (sometimes out-of-the-box, and sometimes after a year or so) being faulty. When this happens, this capacitor won't charge enough, so it can't deliver it's charge to the dreambox when it's needed. This will result in a lower voltage being delivered to your dreambox what causes all kinds of weind effects:

- Lower network speed
- Remote control not always responding
- DiSEEOC Switching not or not always working correctly
- Bad picture quality
- Problems with record/playback over the network
- Problems flashing the box (connection suddenly drops for no reason)
- Optical output not or not always woring correctly
- Only Composite (CVBS) signal on your TV (see also mod 11)
- Low signal and/or problems switching channels on all or some transponders.

This list can really go on and on, and most of these problems can have multiple causes such as bad cabling, bad satellite dishes/LNB's, faulty or bad switches etc. So please make sure everything else is working OK (by testing with another receiver perhaps).

The cause:

Most of the time this problem was caused by a bad production batch of the capacitors.
