

What You Need To Know About the FIRE INVESTIGATION PROCESS

BEFORE THE INVESTIGATION

Before the CFI can arrive on the scene and begin the investigation process, first responders need to put out the fire and attend to any victims. Safety comes first, and the investigation can't proceed until the fire is doused and all victims are accounted for.

THE ROLE OF A FIRE INVESTIGATOR

The role of a fire investor is to determine the cause of a fire, whether that be arson, faulty electric power systems, a cooking mishap, or something else. They're also tasked with evaluating the condition of the building and recommending the next steps in regards to restoration, addressing safety concerns, and legal problems.

WHAT TOOLS AND EQUIPMENT DOES AN INVESTIGATOR USE?

Fire investigators use a variety of tools and equipment during the fire investigation process. One important thing that all fire investigators have is PPE—personal protective equipment. The site of a fire is a dangerous place. For this reason, CFIs wear PPE that includes gloves, protective clothing, a helmet, and thick, and sturdy closed-toe shoes and boots.

EVALUATING THE SCENE

Once the CFI arrives on scene, they touch base with first responders so they can learn about what happened prior to their arrival. Then, they do a quick sweep of the scene. This way, they can determine what safety measures they need to take during the investigation and whether additional personnel is necessary.

DOCUMENTING THE SCENE

Once they finish the evaluation, CFIs document the scene by photographing or videotaping it. As documenting every small detail of the scene would take an exorbitant amount of time, they normally only document areas of interest. These areas include the interior and exterior of the building, the source of the fire, and any crucial pieces of evidence.

PROCESSING EVIDENCE

Before investigators can process said evidence, they need to collect it. Evidence is collected carefully to avoid contamination. Articles of importance are placed into the appropriate container, which are then labeled. Not all evidence can be collected in full, so photos and swabs are taken of this transient evidence as an alternative.
