Dung Beetle Ecology Ilkka Hanski, Yves Cambefort, 2014-07-14 In many ecosystems dung beetles play a crucial role both ecologically and economically in the decomposition of large herbivore dung Their activities provide scientists with an excellent opportunity to explore biological community dynamics This collection of essays offers a concise account of the population and community ecology of dung beetles worldwide with an emphasis on comparisons between arctic temperate and tropical species assemblages Useful insights arise from relating the vast differences in species life histories to their population and community level consequences The authors also discuss changes in dung beetle faunas due to human caused habitat alteration and examine the possible effects of introducing dung beetles to cattle breeding areas that lack efficient native species With the expansion of cattle breeding areas the ecology of dung beetles is a subject of great economic concern as well as one of intense theoretical interest This excellent book represents an up to date ecological study covering important aspects of the dung beetle never before presented Gonzalo Halffter Instituto de Ecologia Mexico City Originally published in 1991 The Princeton Legacy Library uses the latest print on demand technology to again make available previously out of print books from the distinguished backlist of Princeton University Press These editions preserve the original texts of these important books while presenting them in durable paperback and hardcover editions The goal of the Princeton Legacy Library is to vastly increase access to the rich scholarly heritage found in the thousands of books published by Princeton University Press since its founding in 1905 Subject Guide to Books in Print ,1997 Whitaker's Books in Print ,1998

Spatial Ecology of Dung Beetles T. Roslin,1999 Spatial Ecology of Dung Beetles Tomas Roslin,1999-01-01

Dung Beetles Andrew Hipp,2003 The Ecology of North Temperate Dung Beetle Communities Stephen A. Hutton,2004 Aspects of the ecology of north temperate dung beetles Aphodius Sphaeridium and Geotrupes species were studied at several spatial and temporal scales within Ireland The long term stability and diversity of beetle assemblages and the effects of intensification of farming on beetle communities were investigated Dung beetle aggregation patterns and habitat preferences were also examined Over a period of nine years the relative abundance of dung beetle species at two sites varied considerably although the rank orders of abundance were still highly correlated over time The dung beetle assemblage at the functional level was less stable over a long time period with an increase in the percentage contribution of life history omnivores i e Sphaeridium species and a decrease in dung ovipositing endocoprids observed at Fota Most species trapped at Fota have decreased in actual numbers over the nine year period while some have almost disappeared The effects of the intensification of agriculture on dung beetle communities was examined in intensive organic and rough grazing farms Organic farms had significantly greater beetle biomass diversity and species richness compared to intensive and rough grazing farms A colonisation experiment further illustrated the importance of both habitat differences in the farm or surrounding habitat as well as in the different dung types In general intensive farms supported 38% less dung beetle species than organic farms giving an indication of the potential biodiversity loss through farm intensification Mechanisms promoting species coexistence were investigated experimentally in the field It was found that dung beetles showed stronger aggregation in natural than in standardised dung pads This enhancement was partly due to the variation in dung pad size pseudo aggregation but was also related to density effects and occurrence of real aggregation when pad size was controlled In both sets of treatments intraspecific aggregation was stronger than interspecific aggregation indicating that there was a degree of independent aggregation Factors which occur as part of the natural system such as time of pad deposition pad size pad quality the spatial distribution between pads and the total number of pads within the study area could potentially enhance the levels of aggregation obtained in the natural dung and are thus important factors to be included in future research
