Local Foods and Low-income Communities Megan Van de Mark, 2008 The popularity of local foods and farmers markets has grown rapidly over the last decade particularly in the last two to three years As an increasing number of Americans are becoming concerned with where their food comes from 0 3 how it was produced and by whom how far it has traveled from field to table etc 0 3 they are consequently changing their minds about what they want on their dinner table However while consumption of local food continues to increase there remains a significant percentage of the American public who are simultaneously struggling to meet just their basic food needs and or who lack a range of healthy affordable food options which most often includes local and organic foods due to a myriad of limiting socioeconomic and physical spatial factors Unable to access healthy alternatives many of these individuals are often forced to choose from cheap easy readily available and therefore often unhealthy alternatives This disparity of food options has resulted in a growing food gap between affluent or food secure and low income or food insecure individuals Several food assistance programs have been enacted to specifically address this gap by increasing low income consumers access to farmers markets and thus fresh local nutritious foods These programs include the WIC Farmers' 9 Market Nutrition Program Senior Farmers' 9 Market Nutrition Program the Electronic Benefit Transfer cards Farmers' 9 Market Project and matching funds programs This paper analyzes the efficacy of these programs through a targeted analysis of the Silver Spring Farmers Market located in Silver Spring Maryland

Hot Peppers and Parking Lot Peaches Andy Fisher, 1999 Starting a New Farmers Market Desmond Ansel Jolly, 2005 Connecting Food, Farm and You Jan Beaver, 2011-05 Farmers markets have a way of bringing community together I consider them

among the best grocery stores when you buy at a farmers market you're usually getting something that's just been harvested and therefore has much better flavor. You get to participate in the action of supporting local small businesses supporting the world we live in. Jan Beaver Farmers Markets, Low Income Communities and Government Assistance Programs Alysha Brady, 2012. Since the passage in 1976 of the Farmer to Consumer Direct Marketing Act, there has been a sharp rise in number of farmers markets in this country from approximately 600 in the 1970s to over 7,000 today. With this increase, farmers markets began to attract attention not only from farmers and consumers but also from public policy experts. Some research has suggested that farmers markets may be a way to alleviate the poor access to healthy foods in low income communities in areas known as food deserts. The WIC Farmers Market Nutrition Program (FMNP) and the Seniors Farmers Market Nutrition Program (SFMNP) are both efforts to connect low income individuals with farmers market produce. However, there is little data to suggest that farmers markets are located in food deserts often enough to have an impact. Additionally, previous research has shown that the average farmers market customer is an older, highly educated, middle to upper income female, suggesting that low income communities have not embraced farmers markets. This research seeks to shed more light on these issues. By combining data from a database of farmers markets maintained by the USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service, the food desert locator created by the USDA's Economic Research Service, and demographic data collected by the 2006-2010 American Community Survey, this study provides a clearer vision of the community that farmers markets serve. The research reveals that farmers markets in a census tract are correlated with percentage of Hispanic population, percentage identifying as Some Other Race, percentage of households living in poverty, and the percentage of households receiving SNAP food stamps. However, there was no correlation between farmers markets and food deserts. Sandtown, Baltimore Evan G. Winkler, 2010.
