

Nuclear Fission and Fusion

Summary

What	Remember
Nuclear Fission	Small nuclei split into smaller nuclei, releasing large amounts of energy
Nuclear Fusion	Small nuclei join together to form larger nuclei, releasing large amounts of energy

Objective

Understand how atoms are changed by the processes of nuclear fission and fusion.
In this process, you will:

Before You Start

Recall that every process of nuclear change, whether nuclear fusion or fission and transmutation, involves the transformation of matter. These transformations produce different products, including energy. In this process, you will:

Nuclear Fusion

Remember hydrogen and the diagram shows a fusion reaction. In it, a hydrogen atom, which consists of a proton and a neutron, joins another hydrogen atom, which consists of a proton and a neutron, to form a helium atom.

The reaction releases a large amount of energy. This energy is what powers the sun and other stars. The reaction is called nuclear fusion.

The equation for the fusion reaction is shown below. The equation shows that two hydrogen atoms combine to form one helium atom and release energy.

In this and other nuclear equations, the number of protons and neutrons must be equal on both sides of the equation. Remember that the number of protons and neutrons in a nucleus is called the mass number.

Remember that nuclear fusion releases large amounts of energy. This energy is what powers the sun and other stars. The reaction is called nuclear fusion.
