To prevent interference from/to an adjacent institution, the HLX-501 also transmits a group code for each transmitter module. There are a total of 64 different group codes. The HLX-501 is delivered from the factory with the group number set at "0".

Before data from the transmitter can be displayed on the central monitor, the telemetry receiver checks for the transmitted group code to ensure it corresponds to the receiver group code.

The group code can be selected through the bedside monitor equipped with the HLX-501. Refer to the operation manual for the bedside monitor. Contact your nearest Fukuda Denshi representative for assistance.

△ WARNING

- Some combinations of telemetry channels may cause interference with other telemetry systems.
- Be sure to verify in advance that the selection of the frequency channel does not interfere with another channel.
- Report the selected telemetry channel to the manager of radio channels in your institution to prevent interference between transmitters.
- If an adjacent institution uses a telemetry system, it is advised to inform the managers of telemetry channels for the other institutions to prevent interference.
